Questions 38~40

Pollution in China has become worse and worse. China is about 30 years behind the US in regard to environmental laws and 10 to 20 years behind Europe. In July 2007, it was reported that 750,000 people in China die every year from pollution-related diseases. Many of China's natural resources are being degraded, and waste is not being disposed of properly. One of the main problems is that as energy consumption increases, the use of coal increases, which adds to pollution in the air. The government in China has taken some steps to deal with its pollution problem. Since 2006, it has spent more money on environmental protection and has made new laws. By 2010, the government plans to reduce total emissions by 10 percent.
